Evidence Tests and Optimal Sample Size Determination for Risk Measures

Abstract

In actuarial applications we often work with risk measures for insurance products. In this paper, some criteria based on statistical evidence are proposed to test a risk measures. Optimal sample size in which the substantial evidence reaches a desired level is determined. Also, a simulation is presented to illustrate the results.